EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

From October 28 to November 1, 2007, a delegation of six Haitian senators visited Ottawa and Montreal on a fact-finding mission to exchange views with Canadian decision-makers and increase understanding of key issues in present Canada-Haiti relations. The delegation was led by senate vice-president Madame Edmonde Edmonde Supplice Beauzile and its members came from six different provinces and represented four political parties.

At the request of the senate delegation, the visit was organized and coordinated by the Canadian Foundation for the Americas (FOCAL), an Ottawa-based thinktank that works with government, civil society, academics and the private sector to produce alternatives and innovative solutions to the political, social, economic and security challenges that underlie Canadian engagement in the Western hemisphere.

The senators were united in promoting Haiti’s recent gains in security and stability as well as the parliament’s growing strength. But they also cautioned against issues that could impede Haiti’s continued progress such as the lack of trained human resources, the country’s incapacity to absorb funds and the need to hold elections to renew one third of the senate.

Over the three-day visit, the delegation met with 20 Members of Parliament, including two ministers, as well as 12 officials from the executive’s Steering Committee on Haiti, two representatives of the Quebec Ministry of International Relations, the CEO of the Parliamentary Centre, 15 Latin American ambassadors and the leaders of two prominent diaspora groups.
MEETINGS

Legislative Branch

In all their meetings with parliamentarians, the senators conveyed appreciation for Canadian support and development assistance to Haiti. The delegation also noted that this aid has begun to show results as seen in recent gains made in Haiti, notably on the security and political stability fronts. In this regard, the senators noted the plurality of government and the success of consensus politics. While expressing their thanks for Canada’s engagement in Haiti and the critical role this country has played in Haiti’s success, the senators cautioned that recent gains are fragile and there is still a great need for Canada’s assistance.

For their part, Canadian parliamentarians pledged Canada’s continued support for Haiti and were very interested in hearing the senators’ views on Canadian aid. Three main issues were discussed in the senators’ meetings with parliamentarians:
- De-centralizing government and empowering local administrations
- Haiti’s low capacity to absorb funds
- Poor human resources

Conservative MPs
Rahim Jaffer and the Hon. Helena Guergis

After an initial exchange of views and information on the current situation in Haiti, the senators stressed the need to promote investment in Haiti by Canadian firms. They cited the American HOPE act as a possible example to emulate in this regard. Two other points were mentioned, that of the difficulty of certain Haitian citizens to obtain visas for Canada (including one member of the delegation who was unable to make the trip for this reason) as well as including sports in curriculum and taking charge of youths’ free time.

The members of parliament present expressed great interest in helping the senators spread their message and furthering the dialogue between Haitian and Canadian parliamentarians. In return, they asked for a list of the delegation’s main priorities for Haiti in order to assist in securing support for, among other things, continued fact-finding visits to foreign countries.

Bloc Québécois MPs
Vivian Barbot, André Bellavance, Robert Carrier, Johanne Deschamps, Carole Freeman, Serge Ménard, and Caroline St-Hilaire

This meeting was an opportunity for the senators to paint an accurate picture of the situation in Haiti because, as one MP stated, the little news about the country that does make its way to Canada is always pessimistic. The same MP also wanted the senators to identify the most immediate priorities needing attention. The issue of absorption capacity was named as a major impediment to sustainable development in Haiti. Tied to this are questions of human resources and infrastructure. One senator stated that there is a need to concentrate on promoting Haiti’s image instead of dwelling on negative events.
Given the size of the Haitian diaspora population in Quebec, it was important for the senators to meet with members of parliament from that province. The issue of empowering local governments was high on the agenda. Once again, the idea of “twin city” programmes between Canadian and Haitian municipalities was put forward. Ms Barbot explained that a Haiti friendship group was already being formed within Parliament and that several MPs from different parties had expressed interest in joining it.

Liberal MPs
The Hon. Dr. Keith Martin, the Hon. Bryon Wilfert, the Hon. Denis Coderre, Massimo Pacetti, and Bernard Patry

The MPs were curious about the present situation in Haiti. The senators talked about the consensus government, improved security, low inflation and the fight against drug trafficking and corruption. The parliamentarians also wanted to know in what capacity they could support the delegation and the Haitian parliament in general. The senators’ objectives in this regard were three-fold:

- Promote a continuous dialogue between the governments of Canada and Haiti to ensure that bilateral and multilateral funds be used judiciously;
- Receive Canadian assistance and/or expertise on constitutional matters, particularly the issue of Haiti’s too frequent and costly elections;
- Foster support among MPs for a twin city programme to empower local administrations, train personnel and offer technical support in rural Haiti.

Question Period

The senators were invited by MP Vivian Barbot to attend Question Period in the House of Commons. They were introduced to an element of Canadian parliamentary tradition. They were keen to identify speakers and learn about current issues that Canadians take to heart, yet were quite surprised by the way members of parliament addressed one another and interacted during this session.

Executive Branch

Parliamentary Centre
Robert Miller, Christine Ivory, and Bunleng Men

This meeting focused on how to direct the Centre’s current support programme to the Haitian parliament. The senators consider the two biggest obstacles facing the Haitian government to be those of poor human resources and the lack of physical space in which to hold commissions and generally carry out governmental responsibilities. The Centre assured that staff training is a key objective of the current programme and that the lack of infrastructure will be addressed.

Mr. Miller explained the difference between friendship groups and inter-parliamentary associations which are both forms of exchange groups within Parliament that could provide assistance with promoting Haiti in Canada.
The senators also stressed the need for more trips of this nature to take place for Haitian politicians to learn about governing in different countries, but also to educate foreign governments about Haiti and forge channels of communication between parliamentarians. They explained the necessity of fostering relationships with key Latin American countries which now form the bulk of the security contingent in Haiti and could play a seminal role in the country’s transition from peace keeping to development. The delegation feels that supporting such state visits is pertinent to the Parliamentary Centre’s mandate in Haiti.

Steering Committee on Haiti

Representatives from the Department of Foreign Affairs, the Canadian International Development Agency, the RCMP, the Ministry of Finance, and Justice Canada

The Steering Committee on Haiti is an inter-ministerial working group that coordinates the position on Haiti of all the branches of the Canadian government. The senators briefed the committee on recent gains in Haiti. They expressed the necessity to hold senatorial elections as per the constitution in order to maintain the population’s faith in government institutions; however they agreed that changes must be made to the constitution and the CEP (Conseil Electoral Provisoire) must be replaced.

One Canadian government official asked the delegation’s opinion on the mandate of the UN mission to Haiti (MINUSTAH). The senators noted that UN forces will not remain in the country for ever and there must be a plan to prepare for an eventual future disengagement. In the meantime, now that the security situation is under control, MINUSTAH’s forces are needed to patrol borders and ports, provide technical assistance and alleviate the burden on the penal system.

In terms of the Interim Cooperation Framework, the delegation was asked which sectors should be prioritized for investment. The senators responded with three main areas: 1) Haiti needs to become agriculturally self-sufficient; 2) primary to tertiary and technical education must be heavily funded; and 3) the judiciary needs to be further developed. They added that aid funds should go towards the national agenda and not the priorities of the donors.

Elections Canada

Miriam Lapp, Alexandre Michaud, and Marcel Vautour

In view of the upcoming senatorial elections in Haiti, the senators were curious about what type of support, if any, Elections Canada was in a position to give. The senators were interested to learn how the “elections machine” is set in motion in Canada and what the body does outside electoral periods. Ms Lapp briefed the senators on what Elections Canada has done in the way of electoral observation in Haiti and what the organization’s objectives are for the country. The main point of discussion was the CEP, its weak mandate and the need to create a permanent committee. To this end, exchanges and technical support were suggested.
Ministry of International Relations (MRI)
Jean Saintonge and Frédéric Tremblay

The delegation also met with representatives of the Quebec provincial government. Officials from the Ministry of International Relations convened with the senators to discuss how development aid from Quebec is being and ought to be used. It was a familiarization session for both parties as they learned about one another’s objectives.

Rights and Democracy
France-Isabelle Langlois, Nicholas Galletti, and Caroline Brodeur

Much of this meeting for the senators was dedicated to learning about Rights and Democracy’s work in Haiti. The organization has been in Haiti since 1992 and opened a permanent office in the capital in 2006. Work there involves training Haitian organizations on how to articulate their demands and suggestions to the government as well as support to the citizen’s protection office. A discussion on the rights of prisoners and state-civil society relations also took place.

International Community

Grula luncheon
Nathalie Menos-Gissel, chargée d’affaires of Haiti; Arturo Bothamley, Amb. of Argentina; Edgar Mosqueira, Amb. of Bolivia; Valdemar Leao, Amb. of Brazil; Jaime Duarte, Amb. of Colombia; Emilia Alvarez, Amb. of Costa Rica; Ernesto Senti Darias, Amb. of Cuba; Eugenio Ortega Riquelme, Amb. of Chile; Mauricio Rivera, Amb. of El Salvador; Fernando Ribadeneira, Amb. of Ecuador; Manuel Barillas, Amb. of Guatemala; Beatriz Marichal, Amb. of Honduras; Romy Vazquez de Gonzalez, Amb. of Panama; Luis Arias Núñez, Amb. of the Dominican Republic; Alvaro Moerzinger Pagani, Amb. of Uruguay

The delegation was invited to join the Latin American and Caribbean ambassadors to Canada for their monthly luncheon. While the senators thanked the representatives of certain countries for their particular involvement in Haiti, the diplomats were eager to show support for Haitian development and contribute to the transition from peace keeping to development.

Dinner at the Ambassador of Chile’s residence
The delegation, an official from Foreign Affairs and FOCAL were invited to an official dinner at Ambassador Ortega Riquelme’s home. The senators expressed their thanks for Chilean involvement in Haiti and exchanged views on the current situation there. The ambassador stated Chile’s commitment to continue working for development in Haiti and suggested that an official visit to Santiago could be arranged.
Diaspora Groups

International Centre for Haitian Documentation and Information (CIDIHCA)
Franz Voltaire and Jean-Bernard Dejean

Discussions with the chairman revolved mainly around facilitating the return to Haiti on both professional and personal grounds of members of the diaspora residing in Canada. The issue of certain problematic Haitian laws such as the impossibility of double-ownership were said to impede investment and prevent Haiti from fully benefiting from the diaspora. Similarly, it was suggested that the government of Haiti should consider how to encourage those members of the diaspora reaching retirement who may want to split their time between Canada and Haiti.

He also stated that it is time to move from aid to investment in Haiti. More emphasis needs to be placed on training upper management staff and public-private initiatives must be promoted.

Association of Canadian-Haitian Organizations for Development (ROCAHD)
Board

The delegation was very interested in learning about the projects ROCAHD is running in Haiti. The director gave a detailed description of the organization’s micro-development projects which deal mostly in agriculture, animal husbandry, fisheries and reforestation.
CONCLUSION

The senate delegation’s visit to Ottawa was timely. With Canada’s heavy involvement in Afghanistan and the Harper government’s new outlook on the Americas, it was necessary to give an accurate picture of the current situation in Haiti and of the country’s needs in order to give proper direction to Canadian aid funds.

The senators sought to strengthen ties with Canadian parliamentarians in an effort to further political stability and reinforce Haiti’s democratic institutions. They were able to convey some of the major issues facing Haiti in the future and to develop a personal rapport with key Canadian decision makers. Pledges were made to create friendship groups, implement twin city programmes and increase technical and training support.

The senators now look to expand channels of dialogue with those Latin American countries with troops in the MINUSTAH forces to urge their continued support as Haiti transitions from peace keeping to development. The delegation will be visiting Mexico City at the end of November and has also received an invitation to Brazil.
